Blame colonialism for Africa's lack of development. Africa's lack of development can be attributed to its history of colonialism and imperialism. In the late 1400's wealth-hungry traders arrived from all over Europe - Belgium, France, Germany, Portugal, Spain, Italy, and the United Kingdom - and started their colonial practices.

Environmental issues in Africa - Wikipedia

African rhetorical theory emphasizes communal discourse, deliberation and action. It is a rhetoric of resistance, formed in the crucible of struggle. It is not just about African people, but also about all of humanity. It is the rhetoric of reaffirmation, for African peoples as well as all of those who are not considered fully human.

African environmental issues are caused by anthropogenic effects on the African natural environment and have major impacts on humans and nearly all forms of endemic life. Issues include desertification, problems with access to safe water supply, population explosion and fauna depletion. These issues are ultimately linked to over-population in Africa, as well as on a global scale.
