For one, having answers to commonly-asked security questions at the ready gets everyone to the finish line faster. If you anticipate reasonable security questions your customers ask, and you answer them in advance in a standard format, you can make them available easily and quickly. Maybe even just publish them.

The preposition to denotes assignment - that the answer is being "applied" to the question, whether the answer is right or wrong. Conceptually, that makes a lot more sense than the previous one. This is also the more common usage. So I think "the answer to this question" would be your better choice.
